The invocation was offered by Rick Owen, pastor, St. Matthew's Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Burleson, as follows:

Almighty and merciful God, we assemble before you in this moment not as women and men of influence or power but we gather as a broken-hearted people grieving with the citizens of Virginia and the Virginia Tech family. We assemble as sons and daughters, mothers and fathers with expressions of gratitude for the gift of family and their sacrifice which allows us to serve you, the great State of Texas, the United States of America, and all those who inhabit planet Earth. We are not good enough, smart enough, or strong enough to sort out all of the complex issues that lay before us. So we come seeking your goodness, your wisdom, and your strength so that decisions made and legislation passed might honor you and bless the citizens whom we represent.

Bless these, your servants, with the courage of David so they might slay the giants that create chaos, danger, and hinder the growth of our children and youth. Bless them with the wisdom of Solomon so they might find solutions to issues that inhibit quality of life. Bless them with the patience of Job when answers come slowly and the decisiveness of Naomi when the solution is clear. Even when they disagree, bless them with the unity enjoyed by you, the son, and the Holy Spirit. Most of all, grant them the same creative vision that allowed you to bring forth life into the universe so that they might enable Texas to be all it can be for the people who call her home. In the name of the one who is the way, the truth, and the life, Jesus Christ, the risen Lord. Amen.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS CALENDAR
HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTIONS
SECOND READING

The following resolutions were laid before the house and read second time:

CSHJR 19 ON SECOND READING
(by Branch, Solomons, McCall, Goolsby, and Garcia)

CSHJR 19, A joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment to require each house of the legislature to take a record vote on final passage of a bill other than certain local bills, of a resolution proposing or ratifying a constitutional amendment, or of any other nonceremonial resolution, and to publish the record vote on the Internet.

CSHJR 19 - DEBATE

REPRESENTATIVE BRANCH: All right members, this is your open record vote, open government vote, for the session. HJR 19 proposes a constitutional amendment to allow the voters to decide that they can have each house of the legislature take a record vote on final passage of a bill other than certain local bills and a resolution proposing or ratifying a constitutional amendment, or any other non-ceremonial resolution, and to publish the record vote on the Internet. I move passage.

REPRESENTATIVE VEASEY: Mr. Branch, usually when we debate a bill, most of the dealings we have, most of the debates that occur, and the amendment process, all that happens on second reading. Wouldn't you agree with that?

BRANCH: Well, I know that you've been paying attention, but there's been a lot of—

VEASEY: We've had some debates on the third reading bills. I'm not going to disagree with you on that, but what I'm asking you today is most of the amendments that we have, and most of the debates that occur on bills happen during second reading.

BRANCH: Well, I would disagree, Mr. Veasey.

VEASEY: You do?

BRANCH: I would say most of the debate happens in the committees and before the bill gets filed and the substitute legislation. Once we come to the floor there's obviously a lot of activity on second reading. Could you hear me?

VEASEY: Yes. I can hear you.

BRANCH: So, I see your point. I see a growing amount of activity on third readings. I think most of the activity takes place when somebody is thinking about filing a bill and when they file it in committee and often have substitutes or committee amendments.

VEASEY: But currently when we debate bills, most of the activity, most of the amendments, when we stay here until eleven o'clock at night like we did when we were on the electric bill the other day, most of the debate happens on second reading. So my question to you is—and I'm going to vote for this bill—but my question to you is, do we really want to ask the voters to approve something and have an election process which is going to cost money when most of the real debate doesn't even happen on third reading? It just seems a little ceremonial, what you're doing.

BRANCH: Well, I would disagree. I would say what we finally pass out of this chamber is what really matters, and that's what our voters and our constituents want to know about, Mr. Veasey. I would think most of our citizens don't really know or care about first or second or third reading, they just want to know what passes out of this chamber and what will become a law or what could become a law.

VEASEY: But if you want to amend a bill on third reading how many votes does it take?

BRANCH: One hundred votes.

VEASEY: It takes a hundred votes, so when we're just talking about debates that happen within a razor thin margin, we're talking about—

BRANCH: I understand the point.

VEASEY:—the real meat and potatoes of any debate that we have. We're talking about how they occur on second reading. My question to you is that, why we do want to have record votes when we spend most of our time here debating the bill?

BRANCH: I guess—

VEASEY: Look how fast we just went through—

BRANCH: Can I answer your question?

VEASEY:—third readings a second ago.

BRANCH: Can I answer your question?

VEASEY: Yes, you can answer my question. Why you didn't include both second and third readings?

BRANCH: Because I think that there's a lot of process down here that—you've been down here for a while—we get used to and we kind of lose our focus on what our constituents really care about like what finally passes out of the chamber. They don't really care about the parts, and the pieces, and the process. That's why I think this is the right balance. Some people want to leave it the way it was, some people want to go to second reading, or amendments, and I think that this is the right balance.

VEASEY: Let me ask you a question. When your newspaper, The Dallas Morning News, covered our vote on the TXU bill just the other day, they put the story on the website that same day. Right after the second vote. They didn't do the big major news story and I don't think any of the major newspapers did the big story on the Internet or on the newspaper after we did third reading. So I'm asking you, why aren't they following the same logic as you that it really counts after third reading?

BRANCH: The newspaper association is supporting this legislation.

VEASEY: I'm on State Affairs. I know that they're supporting the legislation, but I'm asking if all action occurs during third reading like you're saying, then why doesn't The Star Telegram, and The Morning News, and The Chronicle, and everyone else, wait until after third reading occurs and then do their story on the Internet?

BRANCH: Most of those stories will talk about how it edged toward passage. We have bills that don't pass on third reading. Witness last week. So my point to you is that there's a lot of insider baseball down here, there's a lot of process, and I understand it and I appreciate it as we all do, but at the end of the day what constituents and citizens want to know is, what passes this chamber which may become law, or what passes this chamber that will become law that effects and changes my life. That's what I really want to know about. And I think this fits that balance, and I know we disagree.

VEASEY: Well, I'm going to vote for this bill, and I'm always for more transparency, but to me it just seems like showboating. I'm just not understanding what you're doing by—

BRANCH: Excuse me? What is showboating?

VEASEY:—just by doing third readings only. Don't you think everything we do here should have transparency?

BRANCH: When we were in school, did you have your paper graded on your drafts or your final?

VEASEY: I don't want to deal with any of your hypothetical questions. I'm just saying that everything we do here—

BRANCH: That's not a hypothetical, it's an analogy.

VEASEY:—needs to be recorded, and I'm asking you when the major debates occur, why didn't you want to include that in your bill?

BRANCH: Because I told you that I think the right balance, Mr. Veasey, is the final passage from this chamber.

REPRESENTATIVE BURNAM: Representative Branch, I am generally philosophically opposed to constitutional amendments because I think we have the most junked-up constitution of the states. Would you explain to me again why you think we need a constitutional—I agree with you on the issue—but why I should violate my philosophical perspective and vote for this constitutional amendment?

BRANCH: That's a good question and I'm glad you asked it. To me, why should we change our constitution? We've done it 439 times since 1876, why do we need to do it—

BURNAM: That's not a good answer.

BRANCH: No, no. That's not my answer, can I finish?

BURNAM: Sure.

BRANCH: And so why should we do it again? Because I don't think there's anything more basic, or organic—which is what constitutions are, basic, fundamental law—than having people know where you and I, the people they hire to come down and vote for them in a representative democracy, stand on a bill or a concurrent resolution that finally leaves this chamber. I don't think they care about ceremonial stuff, and I don't think they necessarily care about local stuff, but if someone wants to call for a record vote, as you know, under our rules they can, but the basic fundamental law, which is what constitutions are, should provide that no piece of legislation that will change people's lives leaves this chamber without someone knowing where their representative stood on the issue, and that's why I think it goes in our constitution.

BURNAM: So, you think it should be elevated from the status of a rule, which it is now, to a constitutional amendment?

BRANCH: Yes.

BURNAM: Are you aware that Representative Giddings and I met with representatives of The Dallas Morning News in late January, and we discussed all this open record stuff in the context of the irony of the first day of the session. I put out to them that I really have a problem with constitutional amendments. I like the idea of a record vote on second readings, amendments, even third readings, but I'm really having difficulty understanding why you think it should be raised to the level of a constitutional amendment. I have instructions from constituents who say that it's your job, Lon, to protect us from all of these constitutional amendments.

BRANCH: Well, you heard my answer. I can repeat it.

BURNAM: No, I wasn't happy with it. I was going to give you another chance.

BRANCH: It's foundational, Lon. I think it's fundamental open government. It's basic stuff that ought to be in the constitution.

BURNAM: So explain this to me. Why is it foundational to have a record vote on the third reading, but it's not foundational to have a record vote on the second reading?

BRANCH: I think most constituents, most citizens, really don't care about first, second, or third reading. I think what they care about is when we pass legislation that leaves our chamber. Let's talk about the House of Representatives. That they know where their voices—their representatives—stood on the bill that leaves their house, that is of major consequence.

BURNAM: Mr. Branch, are you suggesting that most of our constituents are not sophisticated enough to recognize what we all recognize? That ninety percent of the time the fate of a bill is determined on second reading as opposed to third reading?

BRANCH: No. I think that they're really smart, and I think that they get it. I understand that they understand that there's all kinds of process down here, so I think they're very intelligent, and they get that there's all kinds of ways to do process and to game process, and make things look and appear the way they are, but what they really care about is the final paper. They want to grade our final paper. That's what my view is.

BURNAM: So if that position holds, let's use, for example, the appropriations bill where today, earlier, we had four different record votes on issues of substance, and they were the last time members were going to be able to act on that. Are you suggesting to me that from the general citizenship perspective it doesn't matter what we did seventeen days ago, what really matters is what we did today?

BRANCH: No, I think they get procedural votes, and they get whether you want to tie the hands of your conferees or not. There's all kinds of process that they get, but they've got lives, they've got jobs. That's why it's a representative democracy. They want us to work the process out, but at the end of the day, I want to know where you stood on a piece of legislation. That's my view.

BURNAM: So at the end of the day, those teachers are going to want to know where you stood on their pay raise, and a majority of our colleagues stood against that teacher pay raise.

BRANCH: And that will be decided in the conference committee between the two chambers. And there will be a final vote on the substance of that issue called a budget vote.

BURNAM: So, there's another level. If you begin the process, it's pretty easy to get a first reading, even I could get a first reading under the worst of times and conditions, right?

BRANCH: I don't understand your question.

BURNAM: It's pretty easy to file a bill.

BRANCH: Is there a question?

BURNAM: It's pretty easy to file a bill and we don't need a record vote on the first reading, right? It just gets referred to committee. Almost automatically. We don't need a record vote there, right?

BRANCH: I think referral gets it sent in a certain direction.

BURNAM: And then it gets sent to—

BRANCH: But someone in this chamber might think that we need, that we ought to take a record vote on the first reading. Some may say we ought to disclose when you thought of it, when you put it on a napkin. I mean, you can always out-sunshine someone else.

BURNAM: And so your point is you're not going to be willing to accept the amendment for second reading because you think that's out-sunshining a third reading?

BRANCH: I just don't think it's the right balance. It's not what—

BURNAM: Well, I disagree with you, and the people I've visited with The Dallas Morning News disagree with you, and Ms. Giddings can confirm, when we discussed this, I said, you know, third reading is relatively meaningless. It's all about the second reading.

BRANCH: Well Lon, I appreciate it.

BURNAM: Thank you.

BRANCH: They support the bill; investigative reporters always want more.

REPRESENTATIVE JACKSON: Representative Branch, how long have you been in the legislature?

BRANCH: This is my third session, and seven special sessions. Not very long.

JACKSON: Over that period of time, how many people have asked you how you voted on second reading?

BRANCH: Not once.

JACKSON: So we're making all this deal over second reading and no one has ever asked you how you voted on second reading?

BRANCH: That would be correct. I don't know if you've ever been asked about that.

JACKSON: I've never been asked.

BRANCH: And the concept of multiple readings was to make sure their representatives had a chance to hear the bill, and make sure they heard the bill.

JACKSON: Yes. Well you've been appearing at town hall meetings and you've talked to clubs, and you've never had anyone ask you how you voted on second reading?

BRANCH: I never have, but they do say, "well, you mean a bill could get out of this chamber without knowing how you stood on the final passage of a bill," and when the answer is yes, they're not happy with that. I have had that happen a lot.

JACKSON: Well, then can you figure out what this debate might be about?

BRANCH: Well, you can always out—I think a lot of these are—some people want it a certain way and some people want it another way, and we're trying to find the right balance. I call this the Goldilocks approach. Try to be just right, you know?

JACKSON: It might be what I call a good deal, you know what a good deal is, Mr. Branch?

BRANCH: Excuse me?

JACKSON: It may be what I call a good deal. You know what a good deal is?

BRANCH: A good deal?

JACKSON: A good deal is when everyone leaves the table smiling and no one is laughing.

BRANCH: There you go. I certainly understand that one can always out-motherhood or out-apple pie someone on one of these issues, that can happen.

JACKSON: Yes, sir.

BRANCH: I'm ready to vote, Ms. Hodge.

JACKSON: Thank you, Mr. Branch.

S. King

When Record No. 531 was taken, I was in the house but away from my desk. I would have voted yes.

Kuempel

BRANCH: Yes, ma'am.

REPRESENTATIVE Y. DAVIS: Listening to the discussion as it relates to—no one talked to you about possibly looking at having the votes being available at second reading. In fact, we were at a hearing and that kind of came up, because isn't it true that we shape policy more when we're looking at the bill in second reading than we do at third reading? Isn't that correct?

BRANCH: Well, I think you can make that argument, but I would make the argument that a bill gets, a lot of the policy gets, shaped as people are thinking about it, as they're working with Lege Council, as they file it in their committee, that the committee helps them shape it, when they may do substitutes.

Y. DAVIS: But in the context of when we actually are voting on legislation, isn't it, in fact that's the time when we really start looking at shaping public policy based on the various amendments that are offered at second reading, and therefore, and even in the committee process, when we talk about it being on the house floor, isn't second reading when that exchange goes on? Looking at the pros and cons of a bill in a broader perspective?

BRANCH: No question about on the floor. There's a lot, and I think there's a little bit of a cultural shift beginning now, and you're seeing more and more activity on third readings. I think third readings got devalued under some of the former rules, because people maybe weren't even here when we were taking third readings.

Y. DAVIS: But wouldn't you also agree that when people are wanting to know the votes or how legislation is shaped and developed, wouldn't you think that they would want to know how amendments to amendments came about? When legislation changed as it relates to the various components of the legislation, which in most cases that's second reading. Wouldn't you think that that's what their interest is, not just knowing that we passed a final bill?

BRANCH: Well, on some bills I would say yes, and others I would say more of the work gets done in committee.

Y. DAVIS: Okay, and at the committee—

BRANCH: And now we're seeing on some of the bills, more of the work's getting done on third reading.

Y. DAVIS: And to the extent that we're talking about the committee process, I would certainly think that you ought to put that in your bill, if you're going to really have open government, the process at the committee level, in my judgment, should be open, and your vote should be open there as well. Given that this is not what you're talking about, you're talking about the floor process, wouldn't you think that we're misleading people when we pretend that a third reading vote gives you a clear definition of where people stood on the various issues of the legislation that was before the house?

BRANCH: Absolutely not. Can I answer?

Y. DAVIS: Okay.

BRANCH: Absolutely not, because again I think it's, again, it's fundamental what finally passes this chamber is what really, really, really matters. Obviously, as you know, if you want to object and call for a record vote on second reading, the rules allow that.

Y. DAVIS: Let's use an example. Based on legislation yesterday, when there was legislation and discussion, that may have had a split vote and today had a unanimous vote, don't you think that suggests there—

REPRESENTATIVE SWINFORD: Mr. Branch, let me ask you, we were, this bill came to our committee. Do you recall the night the people from The Dallas Morning News, Texas Press Association, and everybody was in the meeting, and we asked them what they really needed for their use, and they said they needed your bill, and I asked them if this would satisfy them, and they said it would. Now, then we also that night had a demonstration from Legislative Council as to what all is available and that all of our records are recorded. Every vote we make is a recorded vote. The thing that we found out that night is that even though they're all recorded, the citizens want to know what happened on final passage. Now that does not mean that they cannot find out, they're readily available, any one person, if you're living in China, you can pull up and see how you voted on everything. Every amendment, every bill, every resolution, even the memorial resolutions, and everything else, because we have a system here that if that bill passed, you voted yes unless you record voting no. So we have an absolute 100 percent record vote. And after they viewed that, they understood why they didn't want, nor did they need all this other stuff, because if they're going to publish, they want to know what the citizens will be dealing with at the end of this time. And so that's the reason that we brought your bill to the floor. It gave them what they needed as far as citizens knowing how we voted. Is that a true summary of what happened?

BRANCH: Yes, Mr. Chairman. And to me, this is, we're trying to find the right balance, and obviously reasonable people can differ, some can want to go a little hotter, and some can go a little more cold, some can say "well, let's leave it the way it is," and some can say "let's go to second readings or amendments." Some could then come along and say, "well, we need to go figure out where the first draft was and where it was conceived, and who was in the room, what was the motivation behind it." I just think at some point you have to strike the right balance, particularly for the constitution. This seems like the right balance, when you're changing fundamental law and you're telling the citizens, hey, when something leaves this chamber, you will know where your representative voted on the bill. That's pretty basic.

SWINFORD: Now then. Anybody that wants a record vote, all it has to take is one person to get it.

BRANCH: Our rule allows one person.

SWINFORD: One person on anything.

BRANCH: Less stringent than even our constitution.

SWINFORD: So what this will be will be a manageable record for the press to have, and they won't have to try to decipher what all the amendments were about. This is just what they need, and what they wanted was to know how we finally voted. Is that true?

BRANCH: That's right. In fact, some of them have asked, it's hard, the journal's a little technical and so give us something that's fairly basic, easy to communicate, and as conclusory. So to me, again, it's like the final paper, grade me on my final paper.

SWINFORD: I think that we all, it was in the meeting that night, and I understood what they wanted, and this was our response to them. We had some other bills we could have voted out, but that was not what happened, because after we took all the testimony, we decided that your bill was the one that we wanted to support, because we felt it was the one that would be most accurately portrayed, and it's not any denying how you vote on the final passage of a bill. So anyway, that's the reason we did that, and thank you, Mr. Branch.

BRANCH: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think you also had some concerns about the push by some of the media, but then we don't always get those votes published, and I would sympathize with that in many cases. I hope they will, with this, if we make it easier for them, if they will, in fact, publish more of the votes and inform citizens more. I know sometimes it may not be sizzling stuff, but that's what people want to know and that's what they've pushed for.

Amendment No. 1

Representative Merritt offered the following amendment to CSHJR 19:

CSHB 472 - STATEMENT OF LEGISLATIVE INTENT

REPRESENTATIVE HARDCASTLE: You remember when we passed HB 2095 by Robby Cook in 2003 under the Labor Code which allowed self insurance by a group of employers because traditional insurance was not available to certain employers?

REPRESENTATIVE SOLOMONS: I remember that HB 2095 was originally requested by trade groups, which were extremely high-risk and could only receive an offer of workers' compensation coverage by the provider of last resort in Texas; but 407A, Labor Code, does not create self insurance group solely for high-risk groups which are unable to get insured. It may also be utilized as a tool for smaller employers to pool their resources for a more stable, more affordable coverage.

HARDCASTLE: Do you agree that group self insurance is not traditional insurance and a self-insurance group is distinguished from an insurer?

SOLOMONS: I'm not exactly sure what you mean by traditional insurance. If you mean that the group acts as a risk pool to insure their own members rather than purchasing a workers' compensation policy from a private carrier, then yes. However, the self insurance group then has the same responsibilities under the Labor Code as a private insurance carrier for complying with the regulations of the Workers' Compensation Act. Chapter 407A(407A.004) of the Labor Code that creates the option for a self insurance group does provide that a certified group is not an insurer and not subject to insurance laws and rules except as provided in Chapter 407A of the comp act.

HARDCASTLE: Would you agree that the Labor Code states that a self insurer is not an insurer?

SOLOMONS: Under the Labor Code there is no definition for an insurer; that term is unique to the Insurance Code. There is a definition for insurance carrier under the Workers' Compensation Act in the Labor Code and a self insurance group falls under that definition.

HARDCASTLE: Does the legislation result in increased costs to a self insurance group? What about the new requirement of a biannual audit? Is that the standard in other states?

SOLOMONS: The only requirements incumbent upon a carrier or a self-insured employer or group in HB 472 is that if they hire a TPA: they have to check to ensure they have a certificate in good standing with TDI, their contract has to specify what responsibilities are being delegated to the TPA, the contract has to be kept for five years and once a year they must perform a performance audit and once biennially they must perform an on-site audit of the TPA to perform a claims audit. It is my understanding that of the eight self insurance groups, seven have TPAs, and although it may cost them some, claims auditing is a prudent business practice considering the self insurance group is liable for the actions of the TPA under the Workers' Compensation Act.

HARDCASTLE: If the definition of SIG as an insurer is retained, is it your intent that a SIG would not be subject to additional TDI rules and regulations?

SOLOMONS: It is my intent, and the floor amendment has clarified, that those included in the definition of insurer for the purposes of the TPA statute, including self insurance groups, are included in the definition of insurer solely for the purpose of the TPA act and not a reference to an insurer in any other Chapter of the Insurance Code.

(by Hartnett)

Amendment No. 1

Representatives Hartnett and Solomons offered the following amendment to HB 1787:

Amendment No. 1 was adopted.

HB 1787 - STATEMENT OF LEGISLATIVE INTENT

REPRESENTATIVE DUNNAM: Mr. Hartnett, I'd like to ask you a question or two in terms of your intent and the legislative intent on HB 1787. You're familiar with the significant proof elements that are currently required in regard to boundary disputes, are you not?

REPRESENTATIVE HARTNETT: Generally, yes.

DUNNAM: And basically, those rules, which are stated in Land v. Turner, which is a Southwest 2nd case, require that a plaintiff prevail on the superiority on their own title, and not on the weakness of the defendant's title, are you familiar with that?

HARTNETT: Yes.

DUNNAM: And it is not your intent that that be changed by allowing these actions to proceed under the declaratory judgement statute, is that right?

HARTNETT: It is not my intention to change the specific rule that you just mentioned.

DUNNAM: So the proof elements, it's your intent that those will remain the same?

HARTNETT: Correct.

REMARKS ORDERED PRINTED

Representative Dunnam moved to print remarks between Representative Hartnett and Representative Dunnam.
