"1st. That the resolutions secured to the executive the exercise of unlimited will in striking officers from the roll of the army and navy, thereby amply providing for exigencies that might arise through treason, misconduct or want of capacity."

"2nd. Because they also provide for the protection of faithful servants of the state, who might fall under executive displeasure from causes not connected with the service."

"3d. Because that the "whole spirit and genius of our institutions, loudly declare, that equal protection of life, property, and character, is the legitimate aim of our system of government."

"4th. Because the acknowledgment of principles "obtaining," the reverse of the resolutions would completely destroy honorable emulation in public servants, and the officers of our army and navy being dependent, not on their conduct exclusively for honor and fame, but on the breath or caprice of the executive must eventually be composed of parasites, flatterers and tools of that department instead of high-minded honorable men.

“5th. We enter this protest, because that we know that our constituents would not fail to consider a relaxation of our utmost efforts to carry those resolutions, as a base betrayal of those great principle of republicanism, that they have confided to our care, and because that before the tribunal of a nation of freemen we shall be arraigned for our conduct on this day; and that, according to the shewing that we make of our course, will we receive, at their hands, honorable acquittal, or the stigma of infamy.

Executive Department,

Texas.

City of Houston, 16th May, 1838.

To the honorable congress:

Gentlemen—I regret, on the present occasion, that a sense of duty compels me to return a bill of the honorable house of representatives, without approval. I regret, the more, for the reason that I have entertained a high estimate of colonel Sherman, in many respects, as an officer.

I am satisfied that, in his case, the laws, already in existence, were sufficient to have rendered justice to him.

By a resolution of congress, approved 30th November, 1836, all persons holding contingent military commissions, then in the United States, were provided for, and individuals were to take rank according to the number of men introduced into the country. Colonel Sherman claims to have introduced none but a part of a company under captain Sylvester, which landed at Matagorda, and claimed to belong to the command of Mr. Thomas Jefferson Chambers.

This part of a company left Cincinnati with a knowledge of, and after an order of this government had been published, that no troops would be received into service, unless they provided themselves with arms, ammunition, clothing and provisions for six months. Those, already alluded to, came at the expense of the government, and are charged for in the accounts of Mr. Thomas Jefferson Chambers. So that the orders of this government were violated, with a knowledge of their existence; therefore, no just complaint can be advanced against the executive, for the course which he pursued, in relation to not receiving those men into service. They never were disbanded in the streets of this city; because they never were received into service, and colonel A. S. Thruston, commissary general, in New Orleans, assured them that they would not be received, and that if they came at all it must be at the expense of Mr. T. Jefferson Chambers; as they had first set out so they persisted in direct violation of orders, incurring no trifling expense to this government, at a time, too, when there were more troops in the field, than the government were able either to clothe or provision.

These facts correctly stated, are sufficient to vindicate the executive from all imputation of injustice or oppression towards colonel Sherman or the troops. Colonel Sherman therefore introduced no troops into the country, under his contingent commission, he was never stricken from the roll of the army, he could not claim rank only according to law.

At the re-organization of the army, colonel Sherman was not retained, of course he could not have claims to pay, and perquisites, from the passage of the law re-organizing the army. It will be seen from his instructions, accompanying his contingent commission, derived from the government ad interim, that he had only authority to recruit until the 1st of November, 1836, from which time I am not advised he received any instructions from the Department. Colonel Sherman has received a very considerable amount of scrip, as near as the executive can ascertain, about $6000, which he has not yet accounted for, to his knowledge, nor any portion of it.—That colonel Sherman ought to be allowed a fair commission on the purchase he made on account of government, would be right and proper, but to allow the pay of colonel of cavalry, for duties which could as well be performed by a lieutenant, seems to the executive to be a course that would prove destructive to our treasury.

If the door was once opened to those who held contingent commissions, and introduced no aid to the country, and many of whom have never since been in the country, and they were to be paid according to the shewing of their commissions, without reference to the resolution of the 30th November, a sum less than one hundred and fifty or two hundred thousand dollars, would not be adequate to meet their demands against the government.

The executive has, heretofore, in conformity with the regulations of the United States, directed that no demands upon the treasury should be paid to individuals whatever, who had government means placed in their care, until they had accounted for the same.

The executive, therefore, respectfully invokes the honorable congress to enact such laws, and regulations, as will insure a safe-guard to the treasury.

Thousands have already been paid out of the treasury by congressional enactments, in cases where the individuals, drawing the money, yet remain defaulters to the government to the amount of thousands.

GENTLEMEN—For these reasons I respectfully return this bill without approval.

SAM HOUSTON.

The president laid before the senate a message from the President of the republic, giving his reasons for withholding his signature to the 'joint resolutions for the relief of captain Costly and Jewell's companies.'

On motion of Mr. Everitt, Ordered, that the message be spread on the journals, and made the order of the day for tomorrow, viz:

City of Houston, 17th May, 1838.

To the honorable congress,

GENTLEMEN—Constrained by a sense of duty, arising, I trust, from a due regard to the public interest, I take the liberty of returning the bill to the honorable senate, the body in which it originated.

The executive is never insensible to the application of mer-ctorious and worthy officers and soldiers; but, as he entertains most satisfactory intelligence on the subject of captains Costly and Jewell, he can never lend his countenance to the satisfaction of their demands.

The companies were detailed at a time, when the Indians of the praries were about to make an attack upon the inhabitants from Trinity to Nacogdoches, they were directed to appoint near the Trinity, designated as the town of Houston, to where a number of the families had returned after the Mexican invasion. They received instructions from the commander-in-chief, who was then in Nacogdoches, of a most particular character, and to keep up the strictest vigilance with constant activity on the frontier.

At the same time they were directed to construct block houses, surrounded by pickets, and to construct a boat, to facilitate their crossing the Trinity, should it be necessary, also, to pass over scouts, and be ready at all times to afford facilities as well as security to them.

They were furthermore directed to construct a block-house on the west side of the Trinity river, at the crossing, at which they were directed to keep a constant and sufficient guard.
They were directed to make out muster rolls of their companies, and to send one to the secretary of war, and one to the commander-in-chief of the army, their instructions were of a most explicit and plenary character.

With the exception of one block-house, at the town of Houston, they disobeyed every order given to them. They were required to make reports to the war department, at Columbia, once every fortnight, which they also neglected.

A commissary had been appointed for the purpose of procuring subsistence, and no complaint was made of any want of supplies, yet they made spoil of the citizens stock, and other property, and, instead of rendering that protection which patriotism, and a love of true glory always inspires, they destroyed the subsistence of the community.

The complaints of the citizens, prompted by depredations committed on their property, were the only reports which reached the government, with the exception of one verbal report, brought by one of the officers, to Columbia, who, on his return to the Trinity, disobeyed the very orders he had received—but reported that when those detailed were ordered to perform the duty for which they were stationed at that point —their reply was, that by God they had come to fight, and they would be damned if they were going to work for any body, or obey any such orders. The consequence of this determination, on their part, was, that the country derived no benefit from them, but sustained an injury.

Owing to the disobedience of orders, two of our citizens were killed and one severely wounded, near the fort, in atttempting to cross the river, for protection, to it, for the want of a ferry-boat to cross in, or a block-house to protect them.
Captain Cortly's men did not long remain in service, but were dismissed to their homes. Jewell's company, something less than 30 in number, as they were emigrant volunteers, chose to remain, and not satisfied with their condition, concluded that it was necessary to create more rank, and proceded to elect a major, one captain and the requisite compliment of officers.

Now inasmuch as no muster roll was made, the executive thinks it would be impracticable ever to ascertain how many were actually in service at any one time. They were in the habit of going at large, and if discharges were now to be received, without any roll by which they might be checked, five hundred discharges might be made out, and land scrip and treasury notes drawn to an unlimited amount.

The executive has the pleasure of assuring the honorable congress that, had the orders of the government been obeyed, or the country derived any advantage, as was contemplated from the services of the companies referred to, their accounts would long since have been adjusted; but that he never will sanction any measure which he believes to be injurious to the public treasure, and subversive of all subordination and order. The laws are intended to benefit those who support them, and to punish those who neglected or vi-olat them.

"The laborer is worthy of his hire, but he that laboreth not must expect the reward of the sluggard."

The President submits this bill with his reasons, assuring the honorable congress that he could not, under the circumstances of the case, pursue any other course than to offer to the bill his objection.
