AUTHOR'S / SPONSOR'S STATEMENT OF INTENT

The National Governor's Association has identified high-level coordination of services as a best practice for realizing optimal child outcomes and public return on investments. However, in Texas there is no single lead agency or oversight body to coordinate the work of the 10 state agencies and various local entities that provide services and funding specifically to children and youth. This lack of coordination and accountability produces significant challenges to statewide tracking of spending on children's services and increases the possibility of unnecessary duplication of efforts. It also leaves a vacuum in executive-level agency leadership to establish priorities and assess potential gaps in services to the state's children and youth.

For children and families, the lack of coordination leads to inaccessibility of services due to multiple, disconnected programs. The President's New Freedom Commission on Mental Health reported that consumers often feel overwhelmed when they must access and integrate services across disconnected programs, especially for children involved in multiple public systems, such as education, juvenile justice, and mental health.

Across the country, many states have already established cross-agency coordinating bodies to fundamentally change fragmented service delivery to children and youth. These bodies vary in structure from state to state. As of May 2008, 15 states had a Children's Cabinet and nine other states had a high-level council, commission, or collaboration.

As proposed, S.B. 1646 establishes the Council on Children and Families (council) to coordinate the state's health, education, and human services systems to ensure that all children and families have access to needed services. This bill sets forth the responsibilities of the council.

RULEMAKING AUTHORITY

This bill does not expressly grant any additional rulemaking authority to a state officer, institution, or agency.
