AUTHOR'S / SPONSOR'S STATEMENT OF INTENT

Licensed social workers are often hired by a court or a defense attorney to do assessments of defendants' backgrounds, and psychological history during the sentencing phase of capital punishment cases. These mitigation specialists research the life histories of the criminally accused by interviewing family members and others involved; review educational, medical, and criminal records; and write a comprehensive assessment to provide a better understanding of the defendant's history and its impact on his or her actions. These are all functions authorized by the Social Work Practice Act (Chapter 505, Occupations Code).

More and more social workers across the United States are becoming mitigation specialists, a step in sentencing that is required by federal law. However, some private investigators have challenged the legal ability of a licensed social worker to collect information for a court case or to provide court testimony about an individual's background, if the licensed social worker is not also licensed as a private investigator through the Private Security Bureau.

This bill would amend the Private Security Act, Chapter 1702, Occupations Code, to exempt social workers—who hold a license issued by the Texas State Board of Social Work Examiners and who are engaged in the practice of social work—from requirements of the Private Security Act.

H.B. 1779 amends current law relating to an exemption from private security regulation for social workers engaged in the practice of social work.
