AUTHOR'S / SPONSOR'S STATEMENT OF INTENT

In 2012, Harris County identified 18,679 people with mental health service needs incarcerated in its criminal justice facilities. Additionally, at any given time in the jail, more than 2,100 people are receiving prescribed psychotropic medication. This group represents approximately one-quarter of the total jail population. However, the issue of increasing numbers of mentally ill inmates incarcerated within the criminal justice system does not exist solely in Harris County. Texas does not have an effective service model to treat people with mental health needs who frequently cycle through the county jails and the Texas Department of Criminal Justice (TDCJ). The criminal justice system is the most expensive and least effective way to treat mental illness and stop the repeated arrests of those with mental health diagnoses through evidence-based intervention strategies. Community-based mental health services are much less costly and more successful at treating the underlying symptoms that often are responsible for recurrent incarceration of the mentally ill.

S.B. 1185 creates a four-year jail diversion pilot program for the mentally ill in Harris County to develop effective methods to substantially reduce recidivism among this population of offenders with the hope that the model developed will be replicable in all Texas metropolitan and urban areas. This bill uses a blending funded model that should incorporate state, local, and accessible federal funds.

As proposed, S.B. 1185 amends current law relating to the creation of a mental health jail diversion pilot program.
